Parent Involvement...what does it look like?

Parent involvement is a wide range of behaviour, everything from helping their child with a project or homework, through attending meetings at school, volunteering, fundraising, and engaging the whole school community to get involved.

Why is it important? Research shows that a parent’s involvement in their child’s education/school helps improve the student’s behaviour and academic performance. Yet parent involvement is often seen as a challenge.

DID YOU KNOW?

Most parents want to be involved but don’t know how or think their skills aren’t useful.

What helps parents to get involved?

- Create opportunities for them to visit the school and make them feel welcome. Most parents make every effort to see their child perform in front of an audience.
- Communicate frequently: reach out, inform, & invite. Use a variety of ways to reach parents. Children can also be good conduits to encourage parent response/attendance.
- Update them on their child’s progress. Good news calls or notes home are a welcome change!
- Listen genuinely to their concerns.
- Let them know how their involvement helps improve their child’s behaviour and academic achievement.
- Enlist their help with:
  * crafts
  * reading groups
  * reorganizing a class book collection
  * chaperoning on a field trip
  * a class “phone tree” to call parents about class events
  * getting a donation from their work
- Ask what skills, talents and experiences they can share - then have them sign a parent involvement pledge (e.g. see www.three4me.com) to help with certain tasks.
- Remind them to read your school’s newsletters and keep them informed about upcoming events.
- Link parents together. Have an involved parent buddy-up with an isolated parent. This can encourage participation.
- Develop parent projects that have visual impact, perhaps a mural or new playground equipment. This helps ensure individual efforts are noticed and appreciated.

What helps parents get involved?

- Keep volunteer groups small. Each parent will feel more responsible for their task knowing that the group depends on them. They can also see more easily what they have accomplished.

- Encourage them to sit on the School Climate Committee or school council.

- Have "strategies for reaching out to other parents" as a standing agenda item on your school council agenda.

Suggestions you can give parents to use at home:

- Share how classroom meetings are helping students learn to resolve their problems. This can be continued at home by having regular family meetings to discuss issues and plan together.

- Read a book or view video on relationships, then discuss it with their child.

- Support school rules and follow the same rules at home re: respect, caring, responsibility.

- Address bullying when it is seen - name it, help to stop it, encourage their child to share their experiences/concerns, inform school staff.

- Attend school events like an Imagine assembly or parent info night on bullying.

- Encourage community groups to follow the same principles of bullying prevention - e.g. sports teams, child care programs, Scouts, etc.

If your parents are already quite involved, what's next?

Challenge your parents to come up with new ideas:

- Sponsor a speaker to do a community talk on bullying prevention.

- Take on the challenge of refurbishing the playground.

- Make bullying prevention kits (books, videos, and/or games) for each class. Students can take these kits home on a rotational basis to help discuss relationship issues with their parent(s).

- Share experiences with other schools.
